

Educator Preparation at Saint Mary's College Mild Intervention

ALL CHILDREN NEED
EXCEPTIONAL TEACHERS.

Do you have what it takes to teach children with exceptional needs?

It takes a degree of compassion, a spark of intuition, and a reserve of knowledge to help them thrive in the learning environment. And while it may not be easy at times, being a special education teacher is a rewarding career choice.

If you want to help children who need mild academic or behavioral interventions succeed in the classroom, Saint Mary's is here for you. We provide additional course and field work that will help you gain the skills and experience you need.

Develop your knowledge base and teaching skills

At Saint Mary's, you'll be able to take course work specific to developing instructional strategies, behavioral support, and collaboration skills necessary for working with children with exceptional needs, their families, and other professionals. Plus, we'll arrange field experiences and student teaching in special education settings to fully prepare you for your future career.

The knowledge you'll gain through the program will prepare you to teach all children, whether in general or special education settings. The confidence you will acquire will lead you to venture forward to empower children in reaching their highest potential.

"My special education license is extremely helpful, ensuring that my students receive the appropriate services and differentiating among my wide range of abilities."
