

Study Abroad Recommendation for Social Work

Updated December 2023

The best time for a social work major to study abroad is their sophomore year, spring or fall, especially if they can earn Sophia attributes (or GenEd requirements) when they are abroad. A summer abroad or a weeklong intensive during spring break are other doable alternatives. It is not possible for a junior or senior to study abroad and still graduate on time due to the sequencing of courses in both these years, and the field placement requirements their senior year.
